Cross Cultural Competency

Introduction

Our economy is becoming increasingly global. There is increasing demand for individuals who have required competency to understand the global context of business: from the logistics of international trade and cross-border investments to the cultural and ethical issues that are imbued in the practice of business around the world. While it is relatively easy to acquire knowledge, the challenge is in getting a good grip on cultural understanding. Individuals who are aspiring to work in other countries or transferred to a foreign location have to acquire cross cultural competency to succeed in their assignments.

In last 25 years, since the advent of BPOs, KPOs and globalized IT firms, the need for cross cultural sensitivity and appropriate skills has exponentially shot up. A young person coming from mofussil town (or village) has to quickly adapt to metro culture and then in interacting with customers from USA, Europe to Australia, encounters a steep learning curve.

There are increasing examples of foreigners working in India, particularly in senior positions. They bring diverse perspectives to the workplace. Understanding different perspectives is critical for employees to succeed in their respective roles.

Cross Cultural Competency

Introduction (contd.)

These skills are increasingly valuable to employers faced with the challenge of opening and integrating multiple markets and achieving cohesion and collegiality in increasingly diverse workforces.

Within our large country, we have rich diversity of cultures. While it is obvious that if one migrates to another country, one has to adapt to the host country's culture; many of us do not realize that domestic migration also requires adaptation to a different culture. Cultural adaptation leads to improved chances of success and better performance. In a metro like Delhi, we find large cultural diversity amongst customers and colleagues. A shopkeeper in Khan Market and Sarojini Nagar routinely entertains customers from different countries who are staying in Chanakyapuri.

If one gets a job in an MNC, one has to develop quick understanding of the culture of that organization which may largely be influenced by the country of MNC's origin. (Japanese, German, Swedish etc. are the examples.)
